Miyama City is a small garden city of over 35,000 people, which is located in the southern part of Fukuoka Prefecture. The city declared “One Health Promotion” for the first time in the local governments of Japan in September last year. We will introduce its thoughts to town planning based on “One Health” and “One Health approach” in our city, including efforts to create a resources recycling society that utilizes a biomass center such as forming of a symbiotic society between humans and animals, and establishing of a base for One Health practice, such as one health education.
